The Exhibition Association.
 The Exhibition Association reports another year of successful operation, attested by the financial results, the income having exceeded the outgo by $11,000. That will be good news for the taxpayers; both because they are liable should the interpretation be made, and because the holding of a highly creditable and largely attended spring stock show and mid-summer fair are recognized to be constructive efforts of real influence in promoting the progress of the city and the district.

While the receipts at an exhibition or a stock show are dependent largely upon weather, upon the degree of general prosperity, and upon other factors which are not under the financial control of the association, the financial results of a year of operation are a fair index of the character of the city and the district. The financial results of a year of operation are a fair index of the character of the city and the district. The financial results of a year of operation are a fair index of the character of the city and the district.

Congratulations are due to the association, the directors and management, and also to the taxpayers, that this policy of "bigger and better" events has been applied with a shrewd attention to results, which is the result of the association's success and expenditure in remarkably close balance. The board, in fact, seems to have a somewhat uneasy faculty for guessing what the receipts at an exhibition or a stock show will be, and for regulating the outlay accordingly. Thanks to that, the whole enterprise is on a safe and sane footing, and the city gets the credit and the benefit of the show without having to pay for them.

To Ours the Run-Runner

The Minister of Customs has served notice that he is going to stop the smuggling of liquor from Canada into the United States. If and to what extent that can be done. This for two reasons.

It has been found that a good deal of the liquor which is merely taken out to sea, transhipped in foreign waters, and then landed in the United States, and then landed in the United States. With the result that the Canadian Government is charged with the cost of the excise duty.

The other reason is that Canada has made a treaty with the United States by which the two governments have agreed to prevent the smuggling of liquor from Canada into the United States. This for two reasons.

Financially Canada is the gainer when a cargo of whisky made or imported into Canada is exported to the United States and sold there at high prices. The Canadian Government is charged with the cost of the excise duty.

The demand for the suppression of smuggling originated in a demand from Canadian manufacturers and importers, who claimed that they were being underbid by parties who brought goods into Canada from the United States without paying duties. With the export smuggling trade they are concerned. Perhaps some of them were even financially interested in the brand of the business and would like to see it go on.

Treaty or no treaty, smuggling cannot be prohibited unless it is prohibited in both directions. If Canadian authorities insist on preventing Canadians from bringing U. S. goods into Canada, it would be useless to expect the U. S. authorities to exert themselves to prevent U. S. citizens from bringing Canadian goods into Canada. And the portions to which the underground traffic has grown show plainly enough that if smuggling is to be suppressed that can only be done through the united efforts of both governments.

What We Need Most

By DR. FRANK CHASE

The trouble is
 We don't have time.
 We don't have time to get acquainted with those who are in the world with us. We don't have time to get acquainted with those who are in the world with us.

The two sides of our lives are the material and the spiritual.
 We can take care of the material side easier than we can of the spiritual side. We are so busy with the material side that we have no time to take care of the spiritual side.

When the skin becomes a yellow color, the tongue coated, and headachy, persistent, these are indications that life is being stored up in the liver and not sufficiently eliminated. One in this condition is being literally poisoned by bile which in the right quantity is helpful and necessary to digestion.

A frequent cause of this retention of bile is the stoppage of the bile ducts by catarrhal inflammation of the ducts, causing obstruction by pressure of tumors or feces in the hepatic flexure of the colon, also the pressure caused by pregnancy, and the lodgment of gall stones.

Constipation may also exist, and produce intestinal toxemia by the re-absorption of poisons, which have not been expelled rapidly enough.

There may be no sign of an organic disease of the liver, but just an inability to function well to take care of the bile.

One has been overburdened with bile for a long period of time, but has not expected an instantaneous cure. The liver is a very important organ, and its proper function is essential to the health of the body.

Health and Diet Advice

By DR. FRANK MCCOY

Chief Specialist and Author of "The Fast Way to Health"

Questions on Health and Diet answered by Dr. McCoy, who addressed in care of The Edmonton Bulletin.

 The liver is a spongy organ for the production of liquids necessary for digestion. It is made from waste products of the body and is thrown out through the liver into the intestines to aid in digesting food at the same time as they are expelled.

When the skin becomes a yellow color, the tongue coated, and headachy, persistent, these are indications that life is being stored up in the liver and not sufficiently eliminated. One in this condition is being literally poisoned by bile which in the right quantity is helpful and necessary to digestion.

A frequent cause of this retention of bile is the stoppage of the bile ducts by catarrhal inflammation of the ducts, causing obstruction by pressure of tumors or feces in the hepatic flexure of the colon, also the pressure caused by pregnancy, and the lodgment of gall stones.

Constipation may also exist, and produce intestinal toxemia by the re-absorption of poisons, which have not been expelled rapidly enough.

There may be no sign of an organic disease of the liver, but just an inability to function well to take care of the bile.

One has been overburdened with bile for a long period of time, but has not expected an instantaneous cure. The liver is a very important organ, and its proper function is essential to the health of the body.

BILE POISONING
 The liver is a spongy organ for the production of liquids necessary for digestion. It is made from waste products of the body and is thrown out through the liver into the intestines to aid in digesting food at the same time as they are expelled.

When the skin becomes a yellow color, the tongue coated, and headachy, persistent, these are indications that life is being stored up in the liver and not sufficiently eliminated. New Baseball Scandal "Breaks" in Montreal

Montreal, Jan. 5.—(AP)—Never in my knowledge did Charles Swederisberg, Montreal player before the war, who was president of the Quebec baseball league, in 1917, if anything, the shoe was on the other foot. R. L. Lathrop, president of the league, was the one who was accused of a racketeer's racket, when he was a member of the league. ## "I Almost Ruined a Batting Champion When I Tried To Remedy Heinie Manush's Faults"

By BILLY EVANS

HEINIE MANUSH led the American League in batting last season with the handsome average of .377. Two years ago Manush was removed from the Detroit lineup because of a batting slump that caused his average to drop well below the .300 mark.

During the spring of the year Heinie had his troubles for a time in keeping his head above a .300 average.

Thereby hangs an interesting tale that Ty Cobb unfolded to me last summer.

As the world knows, there never was a greater batsman than Cobb. He was the master of technique. After a season's practice, for five minutes Cobb could dissect his faults and offer a remedy for each and every one of them.

It was not unusual for Cobb to take a visiting player off to one side and point out here and there what he believed that player might improve his batting.

But to get back to Heinie Manush.

"I almost ruined that fellow as a batsman," remarked Ty to me as he pointed in the direction of Manush. It was in batting practice at the Yankees Stadium, and Heinie had just sent two long drives well up into the right field bleachers.

"There is one of the greatest, natural hitters in the history of baseball," continued Ty, "but he has certain weaknesses, like all of us and I thought if I could correct him he might boost his average perhaps 20 points, possibly more."

"Telling Manush aside for several days I worked with him as to several changes I had in mind, particularly as to his stance."

—TY COBB

"Heinie tried his best to execute my ideas but almost immediately his average began to shrink. In attempting to alter his style, he lost confidence in his great natural ability and slumped so badly that I had to remove him from the lineup."

"While Manush sat on the bench for a couple of weeks, brooding over his failure to hit I reached the decision that he was a natural batsman, not a scientific one, that his batting power was great enough to dwarf out all of his minor faults."

"It has been my experience that a majority of batters can improve their style and average by making a study of the business of baseball. Then there are others who are just natural hitters and it is a mistake to try and change them. Babe Ruth is such a batsman."

"Having made up my mind that Heinie should definitely stay into Manush's style, I put him back in the lineup and my only suggestion was that he be natural, take his healthy swing and improve."

In 1925 he finished with a mark of .303 after very bad start. At the start of the 1926 season I told Manush to be natural, and he finished with a mark of .377.

"Improving his average by 74 points over 1925, Manush reached the goal of every batsman, the winning of a batting championship by capturing the American League title."

There is a moral to this story of Heinie Manush, champion batsman of the American League for 1926 — BE NATURAL ALLWAYS.
